Government and non-government sectors in around the globe are dealing with complex issues such as food security, climate change, immigration and poverty. They need skilled and knowledgeable employees with the capacity to identify key issues and problems, analyze them systematically, and reach sound, innovative conclusions. This is where we can help.

Join Murray Fulton, Director of the Johnson Shoyama Graduate School of Public Policy's University of Saskatchewan campus, to learn about our Master of Public Administration and Master of Public Policy programs, as well as other graduate degrees offered through the school.

DID YOU KNOW? 87% of students in our 8-month, paid Executive Internship program transition to full-time employment, following completion of their master's degree.
