

INGREDIENTS TOWARD A SUCCESSFUL ONLINE CLASS

A Johnson Shoyama OnEd Presentation

February 13, 2020 9:00 – 10:30 am

Canada Room, Diefenbaker Building, 101 Diefenbaker Place

Online learning and teaching comes in a variety of shapes, sizes, forms, and tastes. As diverse as online learning can be, similar to classroom teaching, there are key ingredients any instructor can lean on to create a welcoming and engaging learning environment for their students and themselves. The purpose of this session is to discuss base ingredients, as well as some seasoning used in online learning environments to engage both instructors and their students. Whether you've taught online a little, or a lot, there will be something for everyone who teaches online in this session.

This session will highlight topics and strategies related to:

- Design and layout
- Content and activities
- Interactions, and
- Assessment

Presented by JR Dingwall

JR is based in the Distance Education Unit at the University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon. After completing a Master's in Educational Technology and Design, JR has designed and developed instruction and curriculum for a variety of delivery formats (face-to-face, blended, and online) in post-secondary, not-for-profit, continuing education, and open education contexts. JR keeps his finger on the pulse of what is happening in the distance learning and educational technology fields through his active membership in the Canadian Association of Instructional Designers; Open/Technology in Education, Society, and Scholarship Association; and Creative Commons Open Education Platform.

OnEd is a monthly seminar series co-chaired by Martin Boucher and Emmy S. Neuls

schoolofpublicpolicy.sk.ca

JOHNSON
SHOYAMA