

WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE? TOUGH QUESTIONS FACING ONLINE EDUCATION IN SASKATCHEWAN

A Johnson Shoyama On-Ed Presentation

Thursday, July 9, 2020 | 12:00 – 1:30 pm

Delivered via Zoom (Meeting ID: 886 3621 2785 | Password: 808778)

Covid has accelerated the prominence of online education. Its impacts raise questions related to the future of online learning at Saskatchewan universities. For our next OnEd session, we will hear from leaders in university administration and education discussing tough questions facing online education.

- How do we prepare for uncertainty while serving diverse student needs?
- Is this the time to significantly reduce the administrative workforce related to online education?
- Instead of Canadian universities competing for online students, should we consider collaboration?
- How will the role of in-person university education change in a world increasingly filled with online educational opportunities?
- What are some ideas for new business models for online university education in Saskatchewan?

Be part of the conversation and join us for a lively panel discussion on July 9th at noon.

PRESENTED BY:

Dr. Ken Coates, Professor and Canada Research Chair in Regional Innovation, Johnson Shoyama Graduate School of Public Policy, University of Saskatchewan; Fellow, Royal Society of Canada

Dr. Louise Greenberg, Executive-in-Residence, Johnson Shoyama Graduate School of Public Policy and former Deputy Minister of Advanced Education (2012-2017).

Dr. Nancy Turner, Director, Teaching and Learning Enhancement, University of Saskatchewan

The Online Education (OnEd) Network is a group of experts—and aspiring experts—working towards creating top-notch online courses for the university community.

For more information or to be added to the OnEd mailing list, please contact Martin Boucher (martin.boucher@usask.ca) or Emmy Neuls (emmy.neuls@usask.ca).

JOHNSON SHOYAMA

schoolofpublicpolicy.sk.ca