GRADUATE
PROGRAMS IN PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

Are you interested in a fulfilling career that delivers impact?

Public sector employers include governments, non-profits, and co-operatives. These organizations create the conditions for individuals, businesses, and other organizations to thrive. Public sector professionals investigate problems and options, they design and implement solutions, and they administer programs tailored to different target groups or issues. The work of public sector professionals is diverse and so are the exciting career opportunities.

Join Alastair MacFadden, former Saskatchewan Deputy Minister of Immigration and Career Training and current Interim Director of the Johnson Shoyama Graduate School of Public Policy's University of Saskatchewan campus, and Amy Hassett, JSGS USask Manager of Onsite Graduate Programs, to learn about our graduate programs in public administration and how they can help set you on a path for success!

*DID YOU KNOW: Canada's Labour Market Information Council and the Education Policy Research Initiative have examined the earnings of post secondary graduates in Canada in the five years after graduation. Their January 2020 report found that among masters and doctoral graduates, those from business, management, and public administration earned the most five years after graduation.
